ARABIA AND THE MOSLEMS.

ARABIA is a large peninsula of Western Asia, and is destitute of any permanent river; its area is estimated at 1,200,000 square miles, and its population at 5,000,000. The country has no common government; its political divisions are various, and include three Turkish provinces: Hedjaz along the coast of the Red Sea, Yemen farther south, and El Hassa bordering the Persian Gulf; three sultanates, Oman along the gulf of the same name, El Nejd in the interior, and Hadramant in the south; Aden, in the extreme south, is a British protectorate. The religion of the people is Mohammedan, and their language is Arabic. About 185,000 Mohammedans are at the present time scattered over northern Africa, southern Asia, and southeastern Europe.

Authorities are not agreed concerning the precise dates of the chief events connected with the life of Mohammed. Many of the Moslem dates are of uncertain value.

It is called to reform ecclesiastical abuses, and proceeds to contract, and endeavors to crush, the Reformation.

It enacts, with anathemas, the leading doctrines of the Reformation; namely, (1) that all the books of Scripture, including the Apocrypha, are contained in the Vulgate version, and have the same divine authority; the Church is its sole interpreter. (2) That the traditions are accepted as the unwritten Word of God, and are equal with the Scriptures. (3)

The Vulgate is the only authentic version of Scripture, and this alone is to be read. (4) Individual interpretation of Scripture contrary to the teaching of the Church and the universal consent of the Fathers is prohibited. (5) Faith is the foundation of justification, but is not exclusive of good works; justification includes sanctification of the inner man. (6) The seven sacraments are approved, — baptism, confirmation, the Lord's Supper, penance, extreme unction, orders, and matrimony.

The doctrines of transubstantiation and purgatory are affirmed; the granting of indulgences is approved, and clerical celibacy and auricular confession are declared to be divine requirements. [1564. Jan. 26. Approved by the Pope.]

* Prussia calls upon Saxony, Hanover, and Hesse to replace their troops on a peace footing, in disregard of the decree of the Diet, and to join a new confederation under her lead.

June 13. Hanover. Prussia, being refused in her demands, invades Hanover, whose king retreats; also Electoral Hesse, whose elector is made a prisoner, and taken to Stettin.

June 14. Prussia. Austria alleges the treaty is broken by the invasion of Holstein by Prussian troops, and is sustained by the vote of the Diet.

Representatives of Prussia invite the members of the Diet to enter a new confederation in which Austria will be excluded, as the Germanic Confederation is dissolved.

The Diet at Frankfurt decrees the mobilization of the whole army of the Confederation, with the exception of the three Prussian corps.

June 16. Aust. The war with Prussia.

It is caused chiefly by the general desire for a unity of German States by reorganization, and the constant obstacle to such unity arising from divers interests of two great powers, only one of which was peopled by Germans, and Germanic in its interests.

A special provocation exists in the quarrel respecting the government of the North Albingian duchies. Italy participates in the war for the purpose of acquiring Venezia. Each power professes to be forced into the war by the military preparations of the other.

—The Germanic Confederation falls to pieces; the powerful State of Prussia secedes from the Confederation, which is thereby dissolved.

June 18. Saxony. Prussia invades Saxony, whose king and army retire to Bohemia.
